

I am asking the FCC to leave the State of Indiana's telephone privacy law intact. It should not be superseded or weakened by any federal telephone privacy legislation. It is working well; over a million Indiana citizens requested to have their names on record in order to block unsolicited telemarketing calls. If anything, it should be even more restrictive and provide for blocking political parties from making unsolicited calls. Most telemarketers call at dinnertime and disrupt the family meal. I believe people's intelligence should be respected. We can decide what we need and who we want to elect without anonymous, annoying, unsolicited and patently biased "advice." Respectfully yours, Daniel Csanyi, proud Indiana citizen.
